The Magic Key to the Mystery of Life! From time immemorial it has been man's predominating ambition to prolong Life. But among the many brilliant minds who have devoted their lives to the fascinating subject it was left to the immortal Darwin to give to the world, in his great theory of Life, the fundamental principle upon which to build all further research in this direction. Following closely in his footsteps came Prof. Dr. Ludwig Buechner, a German scientist of international renown, with his remarkable work entitled "Das Buch des Langen Lebens" (the book on Longevity). But alas, like Darwin, he too died ere he could reap the fruit of his wonderful doctrine. Others, however, equally great took up the interrupted thread, with the result that two famous German scientists, after years of experiments and research, have at last discovered the secret of Longevity, in the shape of a remarkable Vegetable Compound, which, if properly used, will positively prolong Life. This new remedy, appropriately named "Longavita" (meaning Long Life) has been subjected to the most rigid tests at all the leading clinics and hospitals throughout Europe with marvelous results. Appreciating the importance of this discovery, we have acquired, at enormous cost, the exclusive proprietary right to this truly wonderful preparation, which has proved a blessing to mankind. "Longavita" is the true Tablet of Life, a rejuvenator par excellence, embodying the veritable secret of Longevity in a practical, feasible form. It is the fountain of perpetual youth, which it prolongs far beyond its present limits, while retaining health in a perfectly normal state. "Longavita" brightens the eye, stimulates mental activity, gives elasticity to the step, makes the face full, absorbs wrinkies, cleanses the system, purifies the skin, and is the only true Ponce de Leon remedy for old and young of both sexes. Endorsed by Europe's leading physicians.

Thursday afternoon, in spite of the weather, Grand Army hall was the scene of a happy gathering, it being the annual installation of the Woman's Relif Corps. The hall was filled with members and many visiting corps from Lexington and elsewhere. One unpleasant event, however, was the stepning down and out of Mrs. Nellie M. Farmer, who has made a most excellent and efficient president, and in recognition of this she was presented with a beautiful vase. The officers were in stalled by Jr. Vice-President Mr. Bowenas follows:

After this came the usual congatula tory remarks and addresses which were very appropriate and to the point. At six o'clock a line was formed and all marched to the banquet hall where the supper committee, under the lead ership of Mrs, George Stearns, had prepried a very tempting supper and after the supper tables were cleared corps and associate members marched in and took seats for the installation exercises. The Post orchestra opened the meeting and rendered several selections during the evening. The mustering officer Com. Frank H. Bell, who by the way is a Son of a Veteran, was ushered in with the usual ceremonies and proceeded to install the officers and was ably assisted by Com. Charles F Cooper, who acted as officer of the day in a very acceptable manner. The officers installed were as follows:

TREE WARDEN'S WARNING.

Office of Tree Warden, Town Hall Building, Arlington, Mass., Jan. 11, 1901.

Town Hall Building.

Arlington, Mass., Jan. II, 1901.

The attention of the property owners of this town who have any trees or shrubbery on their premises is called to the spread of the Browntail Moth throughout this town. Owing to the rapid increase of this insect in the last two years, especially in the south-easterly section of the town, something must be done to stop the spread of this destructive pest. This cannot be done without individual interest being shown on the part of citizens owning trees, etc. The tree warden will have his hands full to take care of this insect on the trees of the public highways without having to contend with the spread of the same from private property. The home of the Brown-tail Moth can be easily distinguished this time of the year by what is known-as a tent on the tips of twigs. These tents are made by drawing together a few small leaves and lining them with a mass of silken threads. They are so firmly fastened to the twigs that they cannot be removed without using considerable force. The most effective method of destroying this insect, probably, is to cut off these tents on the tips of the branches during the winter months. As the caterpillars are hibernating in them at this time, they must be burned at once. The tents or webs are unsightly objects, and are easily seen at this time of the year. The pear tree secms to be the favorite food plant of this insect. The number and variety of other food plants to which the insect adapts itself indicates that it may become a very serious pest to a wide range of fruit and shade trees. It will not require but a small amount of time and labor to do this work on places having a few trees, and farmers and owners of large estates generally have help enough employed to make a short piece of work of this matter.

A SENSIBLE THEOLOGY

The Rev. Dr. Watson struck the keyuote of a sensible theology when, in his address at the union century watch-night meeting on Monday evening of last week, he declared that "we cannot get along without God, and it gives us courage to believe that God cannot get along without us." The mistake made in the earlier years has been, not that we too highly exalted deity, but that we have made too little of God's intelligent creation. It was formerly taught from the pulpit that men and women were nothing other than worthless worms of the dust, and in and of themselves had not a single claim whereby they might be saved. The olden time doctrine created such infinite stretches between God and man that the Infinite One was substantially put out of sight and sound. The most of us had been made to believe that it made little or no difference whether mankind was lost or savedthat in either case God would reign supreme, and his plans from the beginning would not fail of their ultimate design. The thought was that God could as well do without all living intelligences as he could with them.

The world can but receive a new inspiration and a new hope when it is declared from the pulpit that "we have the courage to believe that God cannot get along without us." Such a statement places a more reasonable estimate on man, and leads him to believe that he is accounted as being of substantial worth to the maker of all things. It must be logically true that God has created us for a purpose, and the failure of that purpose would be to defeat the infinite plan. It needs no mathematical demonstration in these later days that if God is to execute the thought he had in mind when he created the human family, then he cannot get along without us. There is a mutual relationship established at once, between God and man, when the truth is recognized that we cannot get along without him and that he cannot get along without us. And happily this relationship brings us so near to the father of us all that we may lay our hand in his.

We are glad that the Rev. Dr. Watson, standing on the very threshold of the twentieth century, and in the presence of the multitude, had the manly courage, in spite of all doctrinal beliefs or creeds, to substantially declare that we have the right to believe that God cannot get along without us. Such preach-

COLLEGE LIFE

Aside from the home, there is no life in all the world that forms clover and dearer associations than do one's four years in college. We were strongly impressed with this fact as we met on Sunday evening at the south station in Boston the Hon. Henry A. Morrill of the Cincinnati, O., law school, a college classmate of ours at Dartmouth. We had not seen Mr. Morrill for 20 years, and yet the moment we took him by the hand and heard again his familiar voice the earlier days came full upon us. Now one of the most distinguished authorities in the legal profession, Mr. Morrill is yet the same delightful fellow that he was as a schoolmate and classmate. How we made our tongues fly as we reviewed the past! That interview of an hour and a half was crammed full of reminiscences. We must not forget to make prominent mention of Mrs. Mortill, the accomplished wife of our friend, who added so much to the too brief while of our little visit.

Now we are quite aware that all this may not be of especial interest to our readers. The point, however, we have in view is to emphasize the intrinsic worth of a college life aside from what may be gathered from the books. This daily coming together for four years of young men who are determined to make the most of themselves begets a companionship that closely holds in its embrace the better promises of and the higher resolves for the future. It is quite impossible to ever forget that collegemate who answers back to you in all that which makes up your social and intellectual life. When one has sat for four long years by the side of his fellow and ingoing of individual lives. The two become an essential part of each other, and the compound in each instance is better than either alone. It comes wide of the mark to suppose that the good that comes from what is termed a liberal education consists chiefly or largely in the course of study adopted. To know your man is of far higher value than to know the text-book. And Life in objective form is always to be it reveals nothing which a good teacher preferred to life in the abstract. So we should not know before the examina rever hesitate to declare it as our opinion that that student, whether in our public schools or in the college, who is everlastingly studying for a high percentage in mere scholarship is letting slip the grander opportunities and higher priviis one of the highest attainments, and to know them so well that their friendship shall forever be yours is the best of

There isn't a pupil today in the Arlington public schools, nor is there one of our boys or girls in the college, who it. will not succeed all the better in subsequent years who takes into the account the social side of all scholastic training. The mere bookworm usually dies early in life; but should it happen that his life is prolonged through the threescore years and ten it will be found that he has not brought to the world what it most needs. Live men and women are the demand of the hour, and these you cannot have without those friendships which come from mutual touch with those of our kind. So do you, Arlington pupils in the schools, and you, young men and women in our colleges, in no way let go the delightful companionships which should and may come from your student life.

Our friend, Mr. Morrill, was distinguished through all his college course for his large, generous social nature, so that he always met the "boys" in a and yet he has made his mark al: the same in the legal world. That he is today at the very head and front of his profession is only to be explained from the fact of his abounding good common sense, together with that spirit of industry, and knowledge and love of men and women which has invariably given him ready access to his kind. When will our colleges make it the chief object of their work to give to the world practical men and women? The man is to be rated higher than the mere scholar. College companionship will outlast the college course of study, and what is better than all else, if that companionship is worthy of its surroundings, it will accomplish more good in this great big world of ours than can mere scholarship alone.

LETTER WRITING.

Letter writing as taught in most of our schools is the biggest kind of a fail. ure, and simply from the fact that it is attempted to be taught in accordance with certain prescribed rules. We now have reference to letters of a friendly, social nature. The moment that any formality is introduced in such letter writing the life and spirit of the correspondence is killed outright. We wouldn't go to the post office, however near, for that letter from a friend which had been written in the most approved, formal style, while we would foot it a good long distance, both in the heat of sumis it that in the social world we so frequently insist in putting on stage manners in meeting our friends?

A formal letter from a friend whom we have known all our life freezes every drop of blood we have in our veins. We have come to shrink from "My dear sir," and "Yours with respect." Why shouldn't we get so near to each other as to come within literal touch, that we might thereby feel an interchange of the individual life? The friendly letter should in every instance be the natural expression of the writer. He isn't to imitate someone who is regarded as an authority in letter writing. He is to ignore all authorities save that which insists upon the grammatical use of the English language. It is a fundamental fact that no one can write our letters, and it is equally a fact that we cannot write yours. Each in his epistolary correspondence must speak for himself. So the schools ought not to worse than waste precious time by attempting to teach letter writing as an art, for there is no art about it or in it aside from being perfectly natural, and being natural, it must be remembered, is the highest art. It always gives us a pleasure which inspires to receive a letter from a friend in whose every word we can feel the heart-beats of the writer. We should write as we talk. There is no reason why intervening distance should so put us on our dignity that we shall cram our letter writing with expressions that fall on one like an ice berg. If you have anything to say, say it, and don't make any apology for so doing. Don't try to be other than yourself. Don't forget that when God made you he made you on a different plan than that on which he created anybody else. This attempting to be some one in the classroom with a mutual object in else aside from ourselves is always a view, there must be an outcoming dead failure. So be yourself, whether in verbal conversation or in letter writ

ABOLISH SCHOOL EXAMINATIONS.

We earnestly commend the careful eading of the following, which we take from the Boston Transcript, to our school board, to Supt. Sutcliffe and to Principal Holt and to all others interested in our public schools:

especially is all this true when your newly-made acquaintance and friend is just introducing himself, as are you, to all that is best in the intellectual world.

"It is high time to abolish the examinations of children in school," said Henry Sabin, former State superintendent of Iowa public schools. "The examination serves no good purpose, and do not favor us we will do you."

tion, as well as after it. Many times I have seen little children made utterly miserable by their fear of examinations. It is a good deal of a lottery anyway. have often seen the best pupils fail in examinations, while the poorest pupilsucceeded in answering all questione that had been asked in a certain exami leges of all school life. To know men nation. I am very glad to notice the ancient custom. In Sioux City, Cedar Rapids, Davenport, Des Moines and other progressive cities the examinations for promotion in the grades have almost disappeared. It is only in the smaller towns that the old idea still finds support. Now is the time to get rid of it. And this idea of marking children on the per cent. system is of the same stripe. There is no teacher on earth who can tell whether a child is entitled stripe. to 90 or 95 per cent. I have been in schools where 95 per cent. seemed to be the heaven and 941 amounted in effect to the other place. Now that is all wrong. It is absurd. It is more than that. It is mischievous. It lead to an unwholesome rivalry. Teachers say the It lead to an parents want to know what per cent. their child has got. Mrs. Jones is particularly anxious to know whether her Anna has as high a per cent. as Mrs. Brown's Jennie next door, and if Anna is two or three points below Jennie, then Anna gets no peace until she has con trived to get her markings up to at least equal those of the neighbor woman's This is what produces nervous troubles in children, makes them over work, and brings curses upon the public school system. I remember very well a case where a young girl died soon after graduating from the high school. The parents laid it up against the public school system. The fact was that the principal and superintendent had tried genial receptive mood. While a student to induce these people to give their of excellent standing, the Hon. Henry daughter another year to finish her course. The teachers knew that she could not stand the pressure, but th parents insisted that she must go ahead and finish with her class. The result was a complete nervous collapse and death.

THE PUBLIC HEALTH AGAIN.

There oughtn't to be a question of more mmediate interest to our citizens than the public health of Arlington. While according to statistics our town is distinguished in many ways in all its sanitary conditions, still there is always need of watchful care of the public health in a community so near to Boston and so populous as is ours. We now have especially in mind the proper nursing of the sick. In many of our homes, as in case of scarlet fever, diphtheria, measles and other contagious diseases, there is not sufficient room to accommodate the patient, or more or less frequently, the patients. And then again many of these homes are no: financially able to secure trained nurses for those unfortunately ill. Now what shall we do about this difficulty? One's duty does not end when from his abundant means he has provided for his own household. We are at best only stewards. The silver and gold are not

As we said in a recent issue of the Enterprise, there should be a movement made at once looking to the erection of a hospital for the sick and disabled of the town. Just consider for a moment the case where one or more of the family are ill with some contagious disease, and mer and in the cold of winter, to receive without adequate means to employ a that informal and cordial letter from a nurse, when the mother is compelled to ing not only catches the ear of the listener, but it reaches 'way down into his herself would be sure to be found. Why to her household duties, and where the remaining children must be exposed all the while to the contagion. Don't you men and women who have an abundance of this world's goods recognize that you have a duty to perform in seeing that these poorer homes under stress of illness shall receive proper care and attention? We must not for a moment forget that the boy and girl in homes without abundant means are just as dear and precious to their parents as are yours in homes where every want may be sup plied in times of direst need.

> In conversation with one of our physcians the other day, he said that a hospital for the sick is sorely needed in Arlington, and we do not question that every physician in Arlington would say the same. Now, with half a dozen of our moneyed men and women interested in this matter, we might have within a year's time the required hospital. Has any one a word to say of this proposed charity? If so, please speak through the Enterprise. We purpose to interview some of our leading citizens on this subject at an early date, the result of which interview we will make known to our readers.

The regular monthly meeting of Arlington Veteran Firemen's Association was held last Friday evening in their hall. An unusual number were in attendance and there was a farge amount of business transacted. President Donahue was in the chair, and his rulings were fair and impartial owing to the many discussions. The committee chosen at the previous meeting to arrange for a ball or entertainment made a report, the same fovoring a ball. By a vote it was decided to give this committee full power to make arrangements and set a date. The committee consists of T. J. Donahue, A. A. Tilden, E. W. Peirce, D. R. Macdonald, W. Irwin, W. . The Theodore Schwamb Co. have erected a new building on their premises for quick drying of their lumber. The building is 15x30 and 30 feet high, and has a patent drying arrangement which has necessitated a large outlay. Heretofore it has taken from five to six weeks to kiln dry their lumber and thus prepare it for use. By the new process one inch and one a half inch lumber can be have an ideal plant in the old pumpingdried in 48 hours, and 2000 feet can be put in for a drying. The drying water supply from those discontinued rack takes nearly all the space of the building, there being about one and a half feet to walk around iu. The rack is divided into some 20 tiers, and under each tier is a coil of steam pipe. The drying requires a temperature of from 160 to 180 degs. After the boards are thoroughly dried, the top of the frame, solid iron, is raised by means of hydraulic pressure from a hydraulic pump, by four posts, and when a new lot is put in the same means is used to lower the Baron (this is no scheme of his, he does posts. A delegation of six ladies from St. John's attended the "Quiet day" for the Woman's Missionary auxiliary, conducted by the Bishop of Connecticut at Emmanuel church last Thursday.

The Rev. James Yeames, who is secretary of the Church Total Abstinnce league, was elected a member of the board of managers of the Church Temperance society at the annual meeting held last week in New York.

Miss M. F. Kauffmann, who for the past six months has officiated so acceptably as organist at St. John's during the absence of Miss Swadkins, has accepted the position of instructor in music and drawing in the schools of Hyannis. Miss Swadkins has resumed her duties at St. John's.

The Rt. Rev. William Hobart Hare, missionary-bishop of South Dakota, is to give an address on "Missions in the west" in St. John's church, Academy street, on Wednesday evening next at half-past 7 o'clock. The attendance of all interested in mission work at home is very cordially invited. Bishop Hare's diocese covers the state of South Dakota together with the Santee reservation in Nebraska, about 80,000 square miles. This large field includes work among both Indians and white people. The Cheyenne river, Lower Brule and Pine Ridge reserves are under his oversight. The names of some of the Indian catechists are very suggestive - Eugene Standing Bull, Charles Blue Horse, Daniel High Elk, George Red Owl are examples. Bishop Hare ought to have a large audience on Wednesday.

The 25th anniversary of the legal organization of St. John's parish will be celebrated on Sunday and Monday, the 20th and 21st. The Rev. Charles W. Hutchins, D. D., secretary of the general convention, will preach at the morning service. Dr. Hutchins served the parish as its rector, freely, from 1880 to 1882, two years. In the evening, the present rector, Rev. James Yeames, will preach an historical sermon. On Monday evening there will be a reunion of former and present parishioners. The Revs. C. J. Ketchum, Frederic Pember, W. S. W. Raymond-all of whom have ministered at St. John's-with Revs. Dr. Abbott, E. A. Rand and other clergymen have promised to be present. St. John's is young as an ecclesiastical organization in Arlington, but represents the ancient Anglican communion of the Holy Catholic church, whose history is easily traceable to apostolic times. With the new century the parish enters upon its second quarter century, and bids fair to live and grow with the progress of the years

Correspondence,

I am glad to have you bring the subject of a town lighting plant to the surface again, At the time a committee investigated and reported upon the matter, if I remember correctly, they were not unanimous in recommending the town's taking hold of the enterprise, but with the developments of the last few years I cannot conceive of a committee of intelligeni business citizens properly considering such an enterprise in all its bearings without being favorably impressed with its importance. Yes, I would use stronger language. and name it necessity to the well-being of the town looked at in a business and financial sense. I sincerely hope the matter will be again taken up at our March meeting, and in the meantime the taxpayers will resolve themselves into a committee of the whole and carefully consider the subject in all its bearings and be ready to vote intelligently when the opportunity offers, remembering we station waiting to be used, an abundant driven wells, excellent railroad facilities and liberal grounds to expand if needed.

If there is a business reason why this plant should not contribute to the town's prosperity it has not come to my notice. Perhaps I should accept the holy horror or fear some of our cftizens seem to feel against the town's entering into commercial business, but other communities no larger or more able have fully succeeded in it. We have in Citizen Lenot know I am writing about it) one of whose services it is possible might be secured to establish an ideal plant for Arlington. I can think of no other use a song at forced sale. Some of the committee who previously investigated the subject made the prediction that in two years from the establishment of a plant The Rev. James Yeames will preach the commercial part of the business would bring sufficient net revenue, at even less rates than then charged, to Young men are invited to attend the pay for the street and all other town lighting, and I fully believe it. At anyrate it would keep in town the thirty or forty thousand dollars that is taken across the line. If, when we took on electric lighting, we had established a plant of our own I have no doubt it would have paid for itself long before this, but at that time our people, with

Better Than Rubber Heels, Every one knows that when soldiers cross a bridge they are ordered to break step so that the regular vibration of so many feet shall not endanger the safety of the structure. An army surgeon of France discovered that the brain jar due to long marches in regular step is as trying on the human frame as such marching is on the structure of a bridge. To the regular repetition of a shock to bones and brain caused by this uniform and long continued marching are due the peculiar aches, pains and illness of the troops. On a one day march, he says, this shock is repeated 40,000 times, and often the strongest men who can walk the same distance without trouble when not in line succumb to the strain in two or three days. Therefore this surgeon proposed as a remedy the use of rubber heels. This device has been tried in the French infantry with great

But our army has a better plan than that. We simply break step with the command "route step." At this gait the men march in columns of fours at the rate of 3 to 31/2 miles an hour. They carry their pieces at will, keeping the muzzle elevated. They are not required to preserve silence nor to keep the step. And that's why the American army doesn't wear rubbers.-New York Press.

Rural England a Land of Song. The love of song is strong as ever among the agricultural folk of England, and at the harvest home supper there is always plenty of melody of a sort, says a London newspaper. The old ballads and songs of the peasantry as found in broadsides and manuscripts are full of character. In the great majority of cases the authorship of these poems is unknown. One of the old favorites for recitation at country festivals used to be a dialogue between a husbandman and a serving man, and Mr. Bell in his collection of poems and ballads says he heard this on one occasion recited at Selborne by two countrymen, who gave it with considerable humor and dramatic effect. They delivered it in a kind of chant or recitative.

Curtans Medical Case.

A curious case occurred in one of the Paris hospitals which excited much comment in medical circles. Some time ago a woman named Legros, 55 years of age, was found lying in the road in a state of insensibility and absolutely rigid. She was removed by the police to the hospital, where for three weeks she remained in the same state. The doctors then decided that she was dead and had been so since she was found, the preservation of her body being due to the amount of alcohol she had imbibed.

In spite of the severity of the weather and the uncertain running of the electric cars the dance of the Follen Lend-2-Hand, which was held in the Village hall last Thursday evening, was a financial as well as a social success. THE DEATH BIRD

BY M. QUAD.

COPTRIGHT, 1900, BY C. B. LEWIS.

Long enough before I, a lieutenant of infantry, made my first trip across the great Staked plains of Texas as an escort to a couple of civil engineers I had heard of the death bird of the desert. No living man had ever seen it, but there were plenty who had heard its notes, and its notes always meant danger. One might travel to and fro on the Staked plains for a year and never see a bird of any sort except about their edges. The only living things to be met with are serpents, lizards, scorpions and skulking wolves. The aridness and desolation are too much even for the buzzards.

The death bird, so the legend went, appeared only at night, and then no man saw him. He came to give warning. His notes were peculiar, and no hunter could imitate him, but one hearing them in the silence of the night and the desert could make no mistake. Before making the trip an old hunter said

"There is but one danger to look out for-the Apaches. They may follow you clear across the desert. They will not attack you by daylight, but at night, without your having seen a sign of them, they will creep upon you as softly as serpents and spare none. Listen for the notes of the death bird, and when you hear them take instant warn-

There were 16 of us in the party. Fourteen soldiers were supposed to constitute a force able to take care of itself anywhere. There was more anxiety as to our water and rations than as to the Indians who might dog our footsteps. It was midsummer, and the heat on that great surface of sand and alkali soil was simply terrific. After the first day, when we were clear of shelter, a march of six or eight miles was all any one was capable of. The nights brought cool breezes and recuperation, but they also brought a loneliness no person can describe. Men afloat on the wide ocean in a small boat hear strange sounds at night and are made afraid. Men on the desert are almost made cowards by the uncanny surroundings. If there is the chirp of a cricket or the howl of a coyete, it is not company. It simply adds to the loneliness. If the night is unbroken, then it is as if a heavy blanket had been thrown over your head to shut out the living world.

We saw nothing of Indians. No one believed that a party took our trail. A faithful watch was kept, however, but after a few nights when I had come to realize how helpless we really were I found myself depending on that legend of the death bird. If we were menaced, he would warn us. We had been out a week when there came the blackest of black nights. It was black because it was moonless and a storm was gathering. Our tents were set up in a clus ter, but they could not be seen at a distance of six feet. Three sentinels were on duty, but they could not see the sands at their feet. If the Indians had followed, there would never be a better night for a surprise. It would be no trick at all to creep within stabbing distance of the sentinels, and a volley of arrows and bullets sent through the tents must wound or kil. most of us.

I was sitting in the door of my tent an hour after midnight, wondering how soon the storm would break, when there came to me from a point not far distant the notes of the death bird. They sounded a bit like the call of a quail, and yet they were unlike. They were like words instead of notes. They were soft and clear, and from the very first they said to me:

"Look out! Look out! Look out! Danger! Danger Danger! Death Death! Death!"

I repeat that the bird seemed to be talking instead of crying out in its natural notes. I may have got this idea from my state of nervous apprehension, but so it was. I turned and woke up the two sleeping engineers and asked them to listen. They did not make out words as I did, but one of them whispered:

"That's a danger cry, or I never heard one. I tell you we are menaced by some great peril!'

Thrice the death bird called its notes. and then all was silence as before. A soldier was sent creeping away to call in the sentinels. A few rods to the al fleet which held the north of us, as we had noticed when city of Galveston under going into camp, the sands had been toyed with by some strong gale until the ridges almost formed a natural fort. With the greatest care and in the deepest silence we left tents and baggage, and, taking nothing but our water bottles and muskets, we crept out of camp to the north and by and by reached the fort. It was so dark that men had to be felt for instead of spoken to, but at the end of half an hour we lay in line with our muskets resting on a sand ridge and pointing toward camp. One could tell by the feeling in the air that the storm would soon break and that the first break would be a vivid flash of lightning. The men were instructed to fire with the flash in case it revealed Indians about.

At last, when we were all in a tremble with anxiety, the flash came. For a few seconds it was as if a great searchlight had fallen upon the desert. It was so blinding that every eye was closed for a second. When opened, they beheld a band of 20 Apaches on hands and knees within 25 feet of the tents. A volley was fired straight into their faces and a second as another flash showed a few in retreat, and then we lay there in the pouring rain till daylight came. There had been in the band, as near as we could figure it. 21 Indians. We had fired without aim, and the destruction wrought was due to luck or accident, but there were 16 redskins lying dead on the sands fround the camp. Among these were full chief, a subchief and five or six noted warriors. Our voileys had ac complished more than a year's campaigning with 600 soldiers Indeed they brought peace for two years. Said one of the survivors to me afterward:

"We had planned to kill the entire lot of you. We heard the notes of the death bird and knew you would hear them also, but we didn't believe you would understand the warning. Had you not understood and moved away not a man of you would have escaped.' For many days subsequently-aye, for many months and years-as I was posted along the desert or journeyed across it I looked for the death bird at morning, noon and night, but I never got sight of him. His mission was to fly only at night and to tell of peril.

Why Did They Miss?

Hunters' tales rarely make mention of poor shots and failures, and a story which depicts the remarkable ill success of some famous shots in California a few years ago is therefore all the more interesting. The narrator, Mr. Frank Marryat, terms the incident the one marvelous tale in his book, "Mountains and Molehills." In former times it would have passed for a miracle.

Three of us were out at midday in search of ventson in the Santa Rosa valley. The sky was cloudless and the sun blazing hot. Making for a shady thicket, we unexpectedly started a doe in the long grass. She was out of range before we could raise a gun, but there still remained a fawn. The pretty innocent stood perfectly still, gazing at us. Our larder was bare, and we could not afford to be merciful.

The fawn stood motionless as I advanced a few paces and took, as I fancled, deadly aim. I missed, and still it did not move. The others fired and missed also.

From the same distance, about 75 yards, we fired each four bullets without success. Still the fawn moved but a pace or two, and our rifle ammunition was exhausted.

I then crept up to the fawn and within 20 paces fired twice at it with my Then, unharmed, it quietly walked away in search of its mother.

We looked at each other in surprise. Fourteen shots within 70 paces of a motionless deer! "Well, I'll be hanged!" was one man's comment. "Crack shots!"

We could not explain it, unless the rarefaction of the air had made the deer seem nearer than it was.

universal jollity and reconciliation has been spared a record of blood. In American annals one affair of arms stands out not so much by reason of sanguinary results as on account of the many picturesque and tragic episodes which marked the day. New Year's morning, 1863. was selected by the Confederate commander of the department of Texas for an attack by land and sea upon the Feder its guns. This fleet consisted of the wooden gun boats Harriet Lane, Clifton and Owasco and the ironclad flagship Westfield. Commander W. B. Renshaw was chief of the flotilla. The Confederates were not so well supplied with serviceable ships as their enemy, but a sea force for this occasion was improvised from some river steamers, the most formidable being the cotton clads Neptune and Bayou City. "Prince" Magruder, one of the army characters of the time, was the Confederate commander and his plan was as bold as his social habits were unique and dashing.

The Federal vessels lay close in to the principal wharf of Galveston, the nearest being the Harriet Lane, notorious in the eyes of southerners especially for her connection with attempts to relieve Fort Sumter early in the war. Long before daylight the attack began under the personal leadership of Magruder. Six heavy siege pieces were hauled up as close as was safe to the wharf opposite the Harriet Lane and some lighter guns moved farther in, with a picked column of 500 stormers, who were to dash upon the Federal regiment guarding the wharf.

Magruder fired the signal shot, and all his guus opened, the enemy responding from on shipboard in due time. Instantly there was desperate work on the wharf. The Federals there had removed the planks and piled them up for a barri-After attempting to relay the cade. planking under fire and to place scaling ladders in position the assailants were driven off by the terrible rifles of the guard, aided by canister from the Harriet Lane, which swept the shore laterally. The gunners of the artillery on land were driven from the pieces by the bitter fire of the guard. Turning from the land attack to an en-emy at close quarters, the Harriet Lane found the Neptune and Bayou City alongside, sweeping her decks with mus-ketry. A 32 pound shot from the Bayou City knocked an immense hole in the Lane, and Captain Weir of the tormer ship, seeing that a good shot had been stepped to the nearest gun, saying, "Here goes a New Year's present!" and pulled the lanyard. The piece exploded, killing him instantly.

A shot from the Lane sent the Neptune to the bottom, and the Bayon City in ramming the Lane got fast, so that the vessels stuck together. Captain Leon Smith, who led the naval end of Magruder's expedition, leaped from the Bayou City upon the decks of the Lane, followed by his men. Commander Wainwright and Lieutenant Lea of the Lane rallied their sailors, and after a battle of 20 minutes with revolvers and cutlasses against the Confederate rifles Wainwright was cut down by a sweep from Smith's sword, and Lea fell, mortally wounded. The Lane instantly surrendered, and the father of Lea, who was acting as aid to Magguder, boarded the prize and recognized his son among fallen enemies.

When the fight began, the flagship Westfield was aground and couldn't be moved. Commander Renshaw was summoned to surrender, with the privilege of removing his people from the harbor, but he refused, sent his men ashore and fired the ship. The flames spread so rapidly that the magazine exploded before Renshaw's yawl had put off from her side, and he went down with the wreck. After the loss of the Lane and Westfield the Owasco and Clifton put to sea, leaving Galveston a New Year's prize in grasp of "Prince" Magruder.
